

Idle Hands are the Devil's Playthings

This installation presents how boredom can often create great things. Finding one's own sources of entertainment usually results in a more genuine and engaging experience.

The beginning of the video shows two girls using a child's pool in a very conventional way, with a narrator explaining the heat and lack of things to do. But as the video goes on, the two friends become more inventive with the plastic pool. Ultimately, that they do not even need the pool for their amusement.

Boredom is a very crucial part in the creative process and, though it can feel frustrating in the moment, it is a necessary condition that leads to creativity and originality.
